

05. Ayurveda: International Standards and WHO References

IP-SAKTI Sahayak — RAG Knowledge Base

Purpose

International reference for comparing Ayurveda practice and regulatory considerations across jurisdictions.

WHO benchmark

WHO published benchmarks for the practice of Ayurveda that describe minimum requirements and criteria for Ayurveda practice in Member States, including quality, safety, practice settings, health products/medical devices and regulatory, legal and ethical considerations.

Training

WHO also published benchmarks for training in Ayurveda, covering knowledge, skills, training structures and safety considerations.

International comparison

National rules differ. A RAG assistant should not assume that an Indian requirement automatically applies in another country.

Cross-border questions

For questions about exporting, importing, practitioner qualification or product registration, the assistant should identify the target country and retrieve country-specific sources.

RAG use

Useful questions: What does WHO provide for Ayurveda practice? What does WHO provide for Ayurveda training? Why can requirements differ between countries?

Source note

WHO documents are reference material; they do not automatically replace national law.

Project note: This PDF is an original RAG-oriented summary created for the prototype. For legal, regulatory or medical decisions, use the current official source documents and qualified professionals.
